

Intellectual Property

In today's global economy, intellectual property has become an increasingly valuable asset. For some, intellectual property is their most valuable asset. As a result, it is critical for intellectual property owners to identify their intellectual property, take the steps necessary to protect their intellectual property, and enforce their intellectual property rights when appropriate. Our Intellectual Property lawyers have helped our clients identify, protect, and enforce their intellectual property rights for more than 20 years.

Our Intellectual Property lawyers advise clients on the procurement and enforcement of utility and design patents, trademarks, service marks, trade names, trade secrets, and copyrights. They also advise clients on a wide variety of intellectual property-related agreements, including license agreements. In addition, our lawyers advise clients on cybersecurity and data breach issues.

We represent a growing number of clients ranging from individuals to multi-national corporations. Our clients do business in a wide variety of industries, such as manufacturing, energy, publishing, software, financial, health care, information technology, telecommunication, and utilities, both here in the United States and abroad in foreign countries.

Our attorneys routinely provide in-house training for our clients and present educational seminars to industry groups, advertising agencies, and corporations. Please contact the firm if you are interested in a complimentary seminar.
