Mark Cunningham Highlighted in CityScope Magazine Annual Business Issue

CityScope Magazine recently published "Sage Advice" in their 2024 Annual Business Issue, a column highlighting esteemed local business leaders offering words of wisdom for navigating professional and personal development challenges. The column includes Mark Cunningham's advice regarding mentorship and meaningful professional relationships.

"Strive to find a mentor in your profession who is invested in you and your long-term success. During your career, you will encounter pressures that are both expected and unexpected. Developing a deep relationship with a successful leader in your organization or industry will provide you a sense of direction when you have lost the path. And you will lose the path. Often, I see younger professionals hesitate to pursue these relationships for any number of reasons or mistakenly expect that mentorship is something that should be given and not earned. Like all relationships, it cannot be a one-way street. You need to be invested in your mentor's success as well. However, if you can establish that meaningful relationship, your mentor will likely value it as much as you do. If that occurs, you can be assured that you will have a strong advocate invested in you and your success."
